Dead man's hand: Gambling takes over funerals

Excellence in Arts and Culture Reporting (Global)

1843 Magazine, The Economist

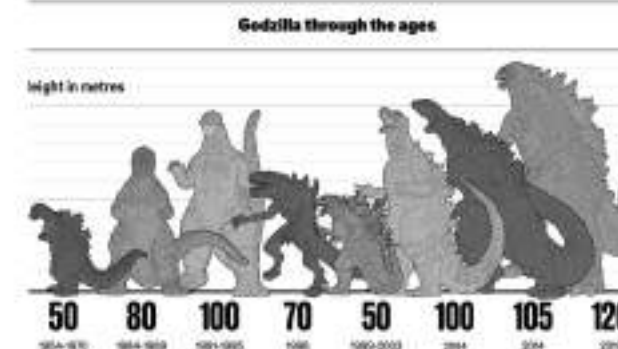

By Andrew North

One winter morning in 2022 I found myself being pushed, blindfolded, into a Taliban interrogation room in Kabul. A guard I couldn't see shoved me into a chair. I heard the door close, then nothing. I listened for hints that someone else was in the room, but all I could pick up was my heartbeat and the sound of my own slow, fearful breathing.

I had no idea why the Taliban had taken me. One possibility was that they might be trying to use me as a bargaining chip in their dealings with the West. Afghanistan's new rulers desperately wanted America to release state funds held in overseas bank accounts, which had been frozen after the old government was overthrown the previous summer. I could be stuck there for a long time.

South Korea's President Yoon reverses martial law after lawmakers defy him

By Jack Kim and Ju-min Park

December 4, 2024 8:33 AM GMT+8 · Updated 6 months ago

SEOUL, Dec 4 (Reuters) - South Korean President Yoon Suk-yeol said on Wednesday he would lift a surprise martial law declaration he had imposed just hours before, backing down in a standoff with parliament which roundly rejected his attempt to ban political activity and censor the media.

In South Korea's biggest political crisis in decades, Yoon shocked the nation and declared martial law on Tuesday night to thwart "anti-state forces" among his domestic political opponents. But outraged lawmakers unanimously rejected the decree. Yonhap news agency said the cabinet had agreed early on Wednesday to scrap the martial law.

Good Evening from Taipei,

It's ironic that TSMC founder Morris Chang is refusing the final instalment of his autobiography just as a US racial discrimination suit against the company throws his own words back at him.

Chang, 91, was born in pre-revolutionary China before moving to America where he went to college and climbed the ranks of Texas Instruments, taking up US citizenship along the way. But the Bamboo Ceiling limited his ascent.

According to some tellings, Chang's story was a hoax. In the MIT-educated, mechanical engineer being passed over as CEO. So he quit TI after a quarter century. He then went to General Instrument for a brief stint before packing up and moving to Taiwan. Chang, who retired six years ago, was born as Chinese American. But if not for his Asian race, TSMC may never have been founded.

Deborah Howington believes that not being Asian is the primary reason why she was spurned out of a senior role as an HR exec at TSMC in California. In a document from the company case, in San Jose, Howington quotes comments by Chang in 2021 in which he's alleged to have said "computers of different brands can often be hooked together, but not people of different cultures." A dozen other plaintiffs have since signed on to the suit and their lawyers are seeking to make it a class action.

"TSMC believes strongly in the value of a diverse workforce and we hire and promote without regard to gender, religion, race, nationality or political affiliation because we respect differences, and believe that equal employment opportunities strengthen our competitiveness," it said in a response to my queries. The company declined to comment on this specific litigation.

Howington's complaint outlines some actions, which if true, are quite egregious. Among them, retaliation for blowing the whistle on what she says is TSMC's hiring practices favouring East Asians (note the suit specifically says "East Asian").

TSMC prefers to employ people of East Asian race and Taiwanese or Chinese national origin, including by bringing workers over from Southern China on visas rather than hiring locally. This preference is reflected in every aspect of TSMC's U.S. -based business. — Howington et al v TSMC

But her allegation of racial discrimination rests almost entirely on the contention that TSMC wants, and in the workplace actively fosters, Mandarin speakers and is so doing discriminates against non-East Asians.
