Excellence in Reporting on Women's Issues

Global

	Award for Excellence	Honorable Mention
Publication:	The New York Times	CNN International
Title of Entry:	The Secret Campaign in China to Save a Woman Chained by the Neck	Economic plight of women in Asia
Award Recipients:	Vivian Wang, Siyi Zhao, Pablo Robles	Jessie Yeung, Hanako Montgomery, Junko Ogura, Daniel Campisi, Yasmin Coles, Teele Rebane, Dan Hodge, Exxon Ruebe, Ladan Anoushfar, Sheena McKenzie, Hilary Whiteman
Judges' Comments:	The scope and detail of the reporting on the Communist Party's efforts to suppress the case is impressive and valuable in itself, but the presentation really elevates it. The final section documenting the activists' continued underground campaign was a nice counterpoint, showing that hope exists even amid such an oppressive political atmosphere. Gut-wrenching story of how the Chinese state and sections of society continue to turn a blind eye to the trafficking of women and to intimidate those who attempt to hold the state accountable, including the NYT journalists telling this story.	An impressive package of stories that offers poignant and often surprising insights into the lives of women who are rarely covered in the media. The piece on the scam farms is an important story -- very few pieces on this subject have covered the trade from a gender angle. Kudos to everyone involved. Deeply reported stories of the plight of women in Asia, from Filipina scam victims to elderly Japanese women preferring incarceration to the lonely world outside.

Title of Entry:	The woman in the bathroom	Hidden burdens of Myanmar women: Health, livelihoods, and early marriage
Award Recipients:	Romita Saluja	Esther J, Khin Hnin Phyu Soe and Reddy Simon
Judges' Comments:	Such a compelling and tragic story. The gum-boots reporting and perseverance shone through with such vivid details through a sustained and exceptional reporting effort. With clarity, empathy, and rigor, the story traces how a rural woman from Haryana was brutalized, confined in a tiny bathroom by her husband, and pushed to the brink of collapse. What makes the piece especially powerful is that it goes beyond individual cruelty to expose the systemic failures around policing, social stigma, legal protection, and mental-health misdiagnosis that leave countless women vulnerable to similar abuse, not only in India but across the world, who are stuck in similar situations.	Powerful and compelling reporting from the front lines of a country where access to sources is so difficult. The focus on the difficulties women face went behind the scenes and spotlighted the grave challenges they deal with on a daily basis. Through vivid, field-based reporting, the work exposes the links between conflict, poverty, reproductive health risks, forced conscription and child marriage while constantly foregrounding women's lived experiences with journalistic rigor and empathy. It is a timely body of reportage that sheds light on the gendered consequences of war and political collapse.

Title of Entry:	全球代孕產業/The Untold Stories of Transnational Surrogacy Industry	晶片戰爭沒有女人的臉：台灣「矽盾」背後的母親群像 系列報導/The Hidden Cost of Taiwan's Silicon Shield: A Generation of Mothers
Award Recipients:	吳家希 Ng Ka Hei、龔珏 Gong Jue、 裘紫 Qiu Zi、陳婉容 Sherry Chen、 符雨欣 Fu Yuxin	陳虹瑾 Hung-Chin Chen
Judges' Comments:	In-depth and comprehensive, laying bare the dark side of the surrogacy industry. The reports of interviewees in different places shed light on the different faces of societies. While this topic is not new, the focus on the role of intermediaries and who are the parties in this supply chain of global surrogacy is an important one. Some very strong interviews in this story thanks to the journalists' investigative reporting. Well done.	A novel topic; it vividly shows the pressure and woes of full-time housewives facing children's education behind the shining lights of Taiwan's chip industry. We need more stories on the economic contribution -- as well as sacrifices -- of women behind a successful economy, or industry or business. In this case, what is even more interesting is how geopolitics has made the industry more pertinent, and how the industry created a whole neighborhood/ecosystem, and how this industry being quite male heavy to start off with has made the dilemma for women even more acute.

Publication:	Bloomberg	Bloomberg
Title of Entry:	India's Digital Nightmare	China's Falling Prices
Award Recipients:	Natalie Obiko Pearson, Anand RK, Suparna Sharma, Ruhani Kaur, Jui Chakravorty, Ken Armstrong, Flynn McRoberts	By Bloomberg News
Judges' Comments:	The graphic novel format is the right call here, not a gimmick. A scam that operates entirely through screens and psychological coercion is genuinely hard to convey in conventional prose, and the vertical scroll experience on a phone mirrors the medium through which the crime was committed. The reporting underneath is serious: six interviews with the subject, 800 pages of charge sheets for a single scene, the artist traveling to Lucknow to verify settings. The companion investigation gives the individual story systemic context. A well-conceived package where the form serves the journalism.	Ambitious in scope and well-executed. Building a parallel dataset from 6,000 company filings while simultaneously tracking consumer prices across 36 cities is a serious undertaking, and the combination of corporate balance-sheet analysis with ground-level price data is methodologically stronger than either approach alone. The "zombie firm" finding gives readers a concrete indicator to hold onto. The personal narratives are necessary here, not decorative: deflation is genuinely hard to convey without showing what it looks like in individual lives. A strong entry in a category where the bar should be whether the innovation served the journalism, and in this case it did.

Title of Entry:	Singapore Budget 2025: What's in it for you?	Lost games
Award Recipients:	Kevin Kwang, Lim Ling Li, Lee Long Hui, Alvin Chong	Charlotte Tan, Ernest Ong, Kimberly Wee, Nurulshazanani Idris, Yamani Chinnuswamy, Youjin Shin
Judges' Comments:	This simple calculator gets top marks for frictionless usability. It's clearly of benefit for anyone affected by the budget. It's impressive that it was refined and made available on the day of the election. It's intuitive input/output is a pleasure to use and it looks great. Smart, also, to include a link with those results to the package of coverage on the budget. Doing so eases the reader from their specific family interests in the budget (personal income tax rebate, child credits, etc) to broader discussion of Singapore's pattern of projected deficits turning into surpluses, and video links to parliamentary discussion.	A fun and sophisticated look at a series of traditional Singaporean schoolyard games. The package did an excellent job blending history and context, making a convincing point that these five games represent an anchor to Singapore's past, with an interactive feature that allowed the user to play them for a bit in the present. Tucked inside this colorful, enjoyable presentation was the observation that this sort of play supports developmental skills such as spatial reasoning, attention and impulse control – making this point elegantly, versus a more heavy-handed approach, which helped the reader ponder what has been lost. Superb.

Judges' Comments:	An innovative, refreshing approach to tell the story of the 10th anniversary of an explosion tragedy through the reflection of five victims and an item they deemed most important to them, including the diary of a mother of the victim. The idea and presentation are outstanding. The stories are moving and touching in an appropriate tone with no sensationalism.	Well-done research and data visualization. Skillful use of graphics and data for readers to sail through the waters to understand the problem of damage to undersea cables.

Title of Entry:	Scam Inc	Tariffed: Toymaker vs Trump
Award Recipients:	Sue-Lin Wong, Sam Colbert, Alizée Jean-Baptiste, Weidong Lin, Claire Read, Rosie Blau, John Shields	K. Oanh Ha, Yang Yang, Naomi Ng, Julia Weaver, Paddy Hirsch, Emma O'Brien, Taka Yasuzawa, Alex Sugiura, Rachael Lewis-Krisky and Greg Stohr
Judges' Comments:	An eye-opening, thoroughly comprehensive piece of reporting that sheds light on the inner workings of the scam industry, its history, and the vivid stories of both the people it ensnared and those who fuel it. A must-listen series that deserves the top spot in its category. Although this is a story that has been told many times before, Wong's podcast is superbly produced and makes for compelling listening. It stands out even in the face of strong competition. Excels on every level.	Featuring voices ranging from an India factory owner to an American toymaker whose life and business were upended by Trump's tariff war, this ambitious series is a prime example of how to put a human face to the numbers and bring the statistics to life. A must-listen for anyone hoping to understand the global repercussions of the tariff war and, above all, the human stories behind this economic crisis. First broadcast on the eve of the U.S. Supreme Court's judgment that blocked Trump's tariff's this three-part series couldn't have been more timely.

Title of Entry:	A Spoonful of Death	Taiwanology : Seeking Peace in Taiwan: An Israeli and a Palestinian in Dialogue
Award Recipients:	Anirban Chowdhury, Dia Rekhi, Vikas Dandekar	Kwangyin Liu, Ya-Yuan Chang, Wei-Ru Wang
Judges' Comments:	This compelling investigative report calls needed attention to a shocking pharmaceutical scandal -- Indian-made cough syrup that killed children in India, Indonesia, Uzbekistan, the Gambia and Cameroon, due to the manufacturer substituting a toxic chemical normally used in brake fluid for a safe but more expensive ingredient. The episode uses audio effectively to tell this story, from the voices of grief-stricken family members and of the specialists interviewed, to sounds that bring a listener into the scene. The sound of the narrator's voice reading the names of the dead was haunting and powerful, as was the program as a whole.	This engaging discussion between a Taiwanese host and Israeli and Palestinian guests provides a creative and thought-provoking food for thought about how to deal with a more powerful and at times aggressive neighbor, and how to think about working toward peace without sacrificing the rights and dignity of anyone involved. The host does a good job of exploring her guests' backgrounds and letting them tell their stories before turning to the conversation to the Taiwanese experience, specifically through the lens of Kinmen.

Title of Entry:	未成年的他們為跨越「性別」付出了什麼？ /The Cost of Crossing Gender for Transgender Youth	铜锣湾二楼的阿海/Ah Hai's CWB 2nd Floor
Award Recipients:	詹婉如 Wan-Ru Jan、林雨佑 U-Iu Lim、 洪琴宣 Chin-Hsuan Hung、 陳思樺 Szu-Hua Chen、 梁玉芳 Yu-Fang Liang	五羊 Wu Yang
Judges' Comments:	An innovative story of a largely-ignored issue. These two podcast episodes shine a light on a relatively niche yet socially significant subject — the struggles faced by transgender minors — with genuine humanity and compassion. Notably, this series spans both audio and written formats, yet the audio content is far more than a mere echo of the written reporting. Instead, the production team makes rich use of on-the-ground recordings, allowing listeners to hear directly from transgender individuals and their families in their own voices — lending the reporting both emotional warmth and journalistic substance.	Solid and detailed information. This podcast series takes Gui Minhai, the central figure in the Causeway Bay Books disappearance case, as its narrative entry point, offering a systematic and in-depth account of the rise and fall of Hong Kong's banned-books publishing industry and the gradual erosion of the city's space for free expression.

Title of Entry:	The Schools That Break Children	Japan's demographic time bomb
Award Recipients:	Alex Mattholie	Leo Lewis, Tom Griggs, Russell Birkett, John Burn-Murdoch, Alex Langworthy, Thomas Beswick, Karin Sugiura
Judges' Comments:	Strong and gripping story that touches so many points of our lives: parenting, school, youth. Unusual topic, a difficult terrain, and dangerous subjects make this an extremely challenging project. Smartly done with enterprise as well as empathy. Excellent reporting that must have been quite difficult. These schools are frightening and it is obvious that the people behind them have found a way to profit from the pain of parents.	Not easy to tell an old story in a way that still hooks you from the get-go. Terrific use of numbers, especially in their display. Incisive sweep of angles related to the aging problem, all packed in with a sharp script. An excellent retelling of a story many think they know: Japan has an aging crisis. Extremely well done.

Judges' Comments:	A beautifully filmed video. The Talum interview itself is a masterclass in lighting, composition, and sound bite selection. The producers' lack of traditional narration was effective, with a solid cast of characters representing the various voices in this debate. While this case centers on Taiwan's laws, it has some global resonance as states weigh their own tensions between environmental and indigenous considerations.	Engaging and interesting approach to an issue that included a bigger, serious message around urban planning, safety and sustainable mobility.

Judges' Comments:	This work documents the ongoing shift in the world's technological center of gravity. Through rigorous, on-the-ground reporting, it guides the audience through the friction of clashing cultures and competing aspirations to witness a future being built from the sand. The entry picked up on a timely topic: semiconductor companies from Taiwan investing in the U.S. The video demonstrated mature storytelling skills: for each segment, it started with a personal story, then delved into the broader picture behind it. The visuals were appealing and enjoyable to watch. All of these have made a business story more interesting to digest.	By layering deep-dive field observations with the voices of local islanders, the footage demonstrates how fragile ecosystems can be salvaged when community will and scientific rigor converge to protect what lies beneath the tide. The entry featured high-quality visuals and interviews on an interesting topic.

Award Recipients:	Scilla Alecci and ICIJ, Nicole Sadek, Carmen Molina Acosts, Sam Ellefson, Tamsin Lee-Smith, Jelena Cosic	Niharika Mandhana, Josh Chin, Tripti Lahiri, Krishna Pokharel and Austin Ramzy
Judges' Comments:	Deeply researched, with a breadth and range that's difficult to match, and that lends special value and memorability to a topic that, while not new, nonetheless has global implications and resonance. This shows great collaboration between countries, delivering gripping stories. While reading the story, I can feel the pressure and the importance of this story.	This series skillfully combines "dry" data with human storytelling and contextualization that stays with the reader well after the reading is done. Super strong personal story.

Title of Entry:	Rakhine in crisis: Begging to survive amid starvation	Myanmar's election under fear: the ending is already known
Award Recipients:	Htet Aung and Khaing Lynn	Ya Nwe
Judges' Comments:	A devastating, ground-level account that documents how war and military blockades are driving civilians into starvation, using vivid testimony to expose rights abuses hidden from view. With strong quotes and brutal anecdotes, the reporting created a connection for the reader with the victims of the war and an understanding of its dire economic consequences. The journalists do a very good job of illuminating the grave daily challenges faced by people in Rakhine State--both the crushing poverty and the dearth of hope. The stories are also well contextualised with a dollop of expert analysis and clear historical detail.	These two in-depth articles, using vivid on-the-ground reporting and interviews, show – rather than tell – that the recent Myanmar junta's election was fraudulent. Good reporting that helps to illuminate how the Myanmar junta ran a fraudulent election, from illegal early campaigning to targeting anyone who dared to sympathize with critics.

Judges' Comments:	Objectively and deeply researched with excellent citations and explanatory notes to give this very important subject the time and attention it deserves. The interviews and personal stories used to tell the story are done with care and given weight without excessive sentimentality and sensationalism as sometimes can be the case with sexual abuse coverage. The pop-up notes, references and legal information are especially useful as it allows the article to flow without being bogged down by details that would turn it into a research paper.	High-quality reporting of the plight of workers in Hong Kong. Well-written. Comprehensive, with highlights of the issue of basic human rights protection.

Judges' Comments:	This piece is everything a feature should be. Much like the exam in question, the piece jumps between dozens of seemingly disparate points, from history to economics to railways to social mobility, but the narrative links between macro and micro ensure the reader is never lost. Engaging storytelling and in-depth reporting that follows one young engineer graduate's obsessive and grueling six-year journey to take an entrance exam for India's Ministry of Railways. The article illuminates the desperation, hopes and dreams of many of the more than half a million people, mostly from poor backgrounds, living in one town known for its study centers and connects them to a bigger systemic failure for millions looking for employment across India.	A beautifully written and fastidiously investigated story that combines a sensitive and heart-wrenching portrait of a man wrongly convicted of murder with a compelling critique of exactly how and why the Japanese judicial system failed him so badly. Title of Entry:	How a Thai worker was taken hostage in a foreign war	'Place of heartbreak': One month since fatal fire, Wang Fuk Court residents reel from trauma, pondering their future
Award Recipients:	Supattra Vimonsuknopparat and Erin Handley	Hans Tse & Kelly Ho
ExplantJudges' Comments:	Well-written piece, with subtle insights into the central character, close observations also captured in resonant pictures and video. A well-crafted and moving multimedia piece on a regionally significant topic. The authors succeed greatly in making the Gaza war an Asian tale by showing the region's human stakes in the distant conflict. It is evident that the authors put significant effort into building trust with the former hostage so that he would open up about his experience in being taken hostage. To their credit, they round out his tale with the perspective of his wife and contextual discussion about his community and the forces impelling Thais to migrate to Israel for work.	Only a month after the tragic housing complex fire in Hong Kong, the story paints a sobering picture of the aftermath for the residents. The story doesn't resort to overly dramatic writing, it lets the residents speak for themselves. Their recounting of what they experienced, and the difficult situations they now face as a result, brings home to readers to full scale of the disaster and its consequences.

Award Recipients:	龔珏 Gong Jue	簡竹書 Chien Chu-Shu 、 李玟萱 Lee Win-Shine 、杭大鵬 Hang Ta-Peng
Judges' Comments:	Drawing upon extensive fieldwork and interviews conducted in Georgia—engaging with a diverse array of stakeholders including surrogate mothers, intermediaries, lawyers, and commissioning parents—the author vividly and powerfully illuminates the complex interplay between transnational industry chains, the exploitation of female labor, legal vacuums, and China's demand for reproductive services.	The report sorts through and examines the deeper reasons behind emergency physicians leaving their jobs—the psychological strain, the sense of helplessness, and the persistence—and draws attention to how these issues might be addressed.

Title of Entry:	Made in America, Watched Worldwide	China quest for tech self-sufficiency
Award Recipients:	Dake Kang, Aniruddha Ghosal, Yael Grauer	Brenda Goh, Eduardo Baptista, Fanny Potkin and Qiaoyi Li
Judges' Comments:	Detailed and disturbing. Painstaking work to pull together U.S. companies involved in surveillance in China. An important piece of work- well-done. Crucial investigative reporting in building up a picture of the technology behind the high surveillance state in China. This three-year, three-part package shines an important spotlight onto how technology enables surveillance. Good pulldowns show how the technology is applied.	This impactful three-part series maps China's high-end strategic aspirations and AI investments toward "algorithmic sovereignty." It details robots training themselves on the factory floor, battlefield integration and a secretive "Manhattan Project" around chip-manufacturing advances.

Title of Entry:	#AutomationFever series	Punggol Digital District
Award Recipients:	Antonia Timmerman, Rio Tuasikal & Mawa Kresna	Charlene Chua, Claire Xu, Hannah Lee, Nikita Pereira, Osmond Chia
Judges' Comments:	The trio of pieces delve deeply into how AI is reshaping individual workflows and workloads, with wide-ranging interviews with workers in different industries. The accompanying essay places these changes in the longer history of technology and work and asks pertinent questions around the value of work. Together, the three pieces deepen the reader's understanding of the issues at stake, the consequences for workers, and what might be done to mitigate harmful outcomes. An extremely relevant series at a time when the AI-job losses debate rages on.	This accessible explainer deploys dynamic 3D graphics to bring the Punggol Digital District to life for general audiences, fulfilling an important role of the press given technology's increasing integration into our physical surroundings. While the graphics are the show stopper, the accompanying text carries equal weight, providing granular detail for readers seeking deeper understanding. Most notably, the piece addresses energy usage concerns head-on. It's nice to see a piece about technology use technology to make its point!

Judges' Comments:	A bold attempt to illustrate and explain the complexities, sensitivity and profound impacts of Artificial Intelligence and algorithm on the expression and dissemination of information about sexual desire. It's a thought-provoking, timely and high-quality series.	Amid heightened geopolitical tension, this series has shed light on enterprises that navigate the turbulent waters of politics to build a "new Asian AI corridor." Title of Entry:	The 'wild' writer who told the truth about work in China	Mumbai's Overhaul
Award Recipients:	Edward White, Xueqiao Wang	Nic Querolo, Saikat Das, Alex Gabriel Simon, Malavika Kaur Makol
Judges' Comments:	I loved how the writer puts you right into the opening scene as you follow the protagonist through the market. Wonderful portrayal of this unusual, self-effacing talent. A perfect example of show, don't tell journalism. Bravo. Superb interview-based piece on a core trend in Chinese society with huge implications. It would have been so easy to do it as basically a book review, but the writer made the right choice.	This fast-paced package centers on the challenges behind modernizing Mumbai into an international financial hub to compete with the likes of Hong Kong and Tokyo. Besides monsoon flooding and traffic gridlock, visionaries contend with redeveloping the city's slums. Focusing on a bureaucrat charged with the city's revamp, restaurateurs cashing in on India's rising affluence, and a local architect trying to save the city's historical treasures amid the rush, show the daunting task ahead.

Judges' Comments:	An excellent, well-rounded series that examines a sensitive and urgent topic in impressive depth. The team navigates a highly political subject with balance and nuance, focusing on the dilemmas faced by musicians and industry professionals rather than playing the blame game. While it is no surprise that Taiwanese musicians face censorship in China, this series pulls back the curtain on how far that control goes, the emotional toll it takes on artists, and the broader risks it poses to Taiwan's music culture. It is deeply reported and well-presents the push and pull these independent artists feel in front of financial gain and creative freedom.	Powerful short videos that hit the nail on its head. The report penetrates deep into different sectors.

Award Recipients:	Viriya Singgih, Mawa Kresna & Alfian Putra Abdi	Irfan Maulana, Rabul Sawal, Achmad Rizki Muazam
Judges' Comments:	A comprehensive, engaging, and thought-provoking report that successfully explains what actually happened regarding the public protests against the government and police that reached a climax following the death of Affan Kurniawan, an online motorcycle taxi driver, in Jakarta in August 2025. The protests against government injustice and the abuse of power by authorities led to the arrest of thousands of activists, whose cases remain unresolved to this day. The three articles are meticulously written to provide readers with facts and accurate information.	The three articles are the meticulous and brave works of those involved in producing them to inform the public about the problems on the ground, open the eyes of local people being exploited and abused by greedy corporations and abandoned by the government in easy-to-read journalistic endeavors.

Award Recipients:	Sam Joiner, Nassos Stylianou, Lucy Rodgers, Dan Clark, Michael Acton, Sam Learner, Kathrin Hille, John Reed, Irene de la Torre Arenas	Brian Spegele and Raffaele Huang
Judges' Comments:	Amid many excellent entries across a wide variety of topics, the iPhone story stood out for its clarity and importance both to investors and consumers. Most readers probably had more than an inkling that Trump's dream was illusory. This story spelled out precisely why. A model of explanatory journalism. Rather than relying on rhetoric or leaks, the FT team dismantled the iPhone's supply chain piece by piece to test a political claim against industrial reality. The visual approach complements rather than substitutes for the reporting.	This package on China's rising dominance in AI, war technology, energy, pharmaceuticals and more was to me the strongest among the several entries in this category examining China's rising competitiveness versus the U.S. The stories were wide-ranging, informative and, at times, skeptical about the vulnerabilities just beneath the surface of this power surge.

With solid on-the-ground reporting and insights, the reports shed light on the increased complex business and trade landscape in the midst of big-power rivalry.	A story that looks at the weaknesses of the rebel groups is definitely taboo in Myanmar, and it is clear that this was risky reporting. It also advances our understanding of the civil war in Myanmar, rather than rehashing old tropes and easy narratives.

Judges' Comments:	The entries submitted by Initium Media are truly remarkable in the following ways: the articles were produced within a tight time frame with the last of the series published only three days after the fire; many of the observations withstood the test of time; the analysis contained good comparisons to similar fire hazards in Shanghai and the United Kingdom, which indicated the amount of hard work involved; and, the editorial team appeared to have overcome their personal emotions when many of us were still in grief.	This piece serves as an intricate chronicle of the Jimmy Lai trial, providing a comprehensive and factual account of a legal proceeding that has become a symbol of Hong Kong's changing landscape. It functions as a methodical record, documenting the transition of a significant historical chapter with observational poise.

Judges' Comments:	A deeply reported series of articles examining one of the world's most important recent industrial developments - the rapid growth of China's auto industry and the global implications for manufacturers and consumers. Deep knowledge of the subject and local expertise. Classic business reporting that was early on this subject. Crisp writing, appropriate graphics add to its virtues.	A series of fascinating stories uncovering the decades-long history of rare earths manufacturing in China, the dire cost to the country's environment, and Japan's attempt to reduce its reliance on Chinese exports. Together, these three stories form a comprehensive and detailed primer on all the key aspects of the rare earths industry. An essential read.

Title of Entry:	Chairman Stokes: The inside story of Seven (as told by the board)	We didn't have a hope in hell': KWM's cautionary China tale
Award Recipients:	Max Mason, Greg Bearup and Sarah Thompson	Maxim Shanahan
Judges' Comments:	A sad end to an incredible career and personal story told with dramatic flair and drive. The narrative of how power corrupts uses the source materials to help "show, not tell" without overwhelming the reader; the emails add color and drama to the story, bringing to life the frustration of the board members with the chairman's behavior. The arc of the story is crafted in such a way that even as the outcome is well-known, the reader wants to follow the story line to the end. Well done! This is reporting that provides a valuable public service.	I was fascinated by this story, not just because of the many details it surfaced about the law firm's apparent involvement in problematic or corrupt deals, but also because of what it said about the trajectory of Australian-Chinese relations, and how the high hopes of an earlier era foundered over time. A valuable piece of work.

Judges' Comments:	It is the core issue in Taiwan. With clear graphics and complete personality stories, the reports recorded the growth and plight of the most special geopolitical economy in this century.	This comprehensive reporting exposed how shadow banking has metastasized in Taiwan's economy and affected tens of thousands of ordinary people and their families. It's a textbook example of good economic reporting.

Judges' Comments:	This story of criminals kidnapping people to work in scam call centers in Myanmar, perhaps with the connivance of Thai immigration officials, is delivered in a comic book format but maintains the reporting standards and balance of more traditional Reuters story formats. Compelling story, beautiful art. It demonstrates the virtues of a graphic novel as an informative piece.	I assume some of these graphics were created as breaking news. If so, their quality is undeniable in such a short period of time.

Judges' Comments:	Successfully melted different graphics into reports, vividly illustrate the disaster for readers to understand why it happened. This piece marries impressive 3D mapping technology with deep on-the-ground reporting, it creates an immersive experience that really shows the scale of the impact of the landslide.	Thorough investigation by visual graphics and media content. The graphics are very effective in showing the pros and cons of traffic circles. And it is a great example of data journalism that the story is driven by the findings from the data.

Judges' Comments:	As two of the world's nuclear-armed powers, India and Pakistan, squared off against each other in May 2025, CNN was poised to tell viewers around the globe why they should care. A live blog kept pace with developments. Standalone features detailed how a truce was reached, as well as the fallout of uneasy calm in Kashmir that remains. Great graphics and historical context made the package easily accessible to anyone unfamiliar with the history of the disputed territory.	A riveting account. The Wall Street Journal's global reporting team quickly produced a comprehensive spot story of the air crash itself. Next came a profile of the lone survivor among the 242 people on board, including a telling bedside video. The WSJ stayed on the case and a month later —as the story was still unfolding— revealed that preliminary signs inside the confidential crash investigation pointed to pilot suicide. The writing was calm, factual and benefitted from reporters who had experience in covering air disasters.

Judges' Comments:	HK01 provided timely updates of the fire through its live blogs and also a comprehensive deep-dive on the systemic failures that led to the tragedy. It also used multiple visual elements, videos and creative storytelling to cover the disaster.	A comprehensive reporting package on the Matai'an landslide, featuring tic-toc pieces tracking the hours leading up to and during the tragedy, alongside strong data visualizations and charts analyzing its causes and aftermath. Title of Entry:	From restaurant scandals to booming museums and economic battles	China and Trump's America

Judges' Comments:	The Chaguan columns submitted for this award demonstrate both range and insight into contemporary China. The column on the Chinese economic model and its impact on the global economy is excellent opinion/analytical writing. The columns on museums and fine dining in China provide very different but also valuable windows into China today, from the intensified use of historical patriotic narratives to the growing class divisions illustrated through the prism of the food scene. Well-written and entertaining, with a hefty dose of critical perspective.	Thoroughly brilliant piece of business opinion writing that pulls together the contradictions of U.S. policy towards China and how it is being pushed by Silicon Valley towards protectionism, and by the Trump Administration towards isolationism. The technological rivalry "never ends," but it has a major impact on outcomes as the U.S. undermines its legacy of technological innovation while China strives for the technological frontier and beyond.

Judges' Comments:	The writer uses facts to lay bare the hypocrisy and contradictions of the international system that sanctions Cambodia's scam compound operators, while it conveniently avoids holding accountable the powerful officials behind one of the worst human trafficking and financial crimes of this century. A trio of thorough, forcefully expressed pieces that call for action regarding Cambodian crime in a way that any reader can understand.	Brave, powerful, urgently relevant and human. This is the best piece of opinion writing I've read in a long time. (I also like the AI-generated cartoon). Very personal piece on the author's own battle with cancer, well-researched and the first-person narrative makes for a unique and powerful read from a known tech expert.

Judges' Comments:	Multiple entities pooled resources for this expose of the apparent lies of the Indonesian nickel mining company Harita Nickel. A major supplier of nickel to the global market, Harita recorded dangerous levels of water pollution, internal documents showed, but never told the people on the island of Obi who were drinking the water. Chalk up another stellar moment for consortia journalism.	This series, which relies on satellite imagery, on-the-ground reporting and strong visuals, explains how the global energy future is being shaped by officials in China and the United States. A look at the potential of fusion energy casts an eye forward in a world where China is accelerating toward clean energy, while America remains locked in fossil fuels. Excellent reporting in China, showing the most consequential global energy divide, driven by geopolitics.

The story reaches into supply chains, national and international policies and individual consumer choices in a powerful and poignant way. Very, very well done. This cross-border collaboration shines light on a global issue's relevance on a regional level, bringing an abstract idea into tangible form. Real people, vetted data, creative visuals and strong writing come together for an impactful series.	This investigation --done in a dangerous country where impunity is the norm-- demonstrates the power of environmental reporting to cause change, empower local communities and shine light on the start of international supply chains. The brave journalists and sharp editors who worked on this piece showed great courage, skill and tenacity to bring an important issue to a global audience.

Judges' Comments:	A landmark piece of data journalism. By cross-referencing factory locations with school coordinates across the country, this reporting team created a finding that simply did not exist before they built it. The gap between what the data said and what children were breathing is the kind of central revelation that defines investigative environmental journalism at its best. Policy impact was direct and documented -- the Minister visited affected schools, and children were formally designated a sensitive group.	Excellent series. The illustration of the relevance of extreme weather to daily life is just about right. First-hand reporting of Henan farmers is highly difficult. Detailed and in-depth reporting helps tell the story of how climate risk directly affects farmers and how policies can help.

It captures the sheer scale of the disaster while keeping the focus on the human cost, documenting everything from the intensity of the flames to the raw emotion of the community as the tragedy unfolded. From my point of view, the photo of the year.	This series provides a rare look at a side of Afghan life that usually stays hidden, especially under restrictive conditions. It's an intimate look at how people try to hold onto their identity, captured with impressive access and a clear respect for the subjects' privacy and safety. I love the way magazine covers are used into the photos: they become context, story, and protagonist of the narrative.

Judges' Comments:	This work stands out because the photographer chose to inhabit the same choking, hazardous environment as the workers rather than shooting from a distance. It results in a visceral and honest documentation of the grit required for a type of labor that society usually keeps out of sight. The heavy lifting, strain and toll on the workers bodies as well as the heat and the extraordinarily hard conditions are clearly evident in the images. Poignant.	These five images heartbreakingly represent the Tai Po tragedy. The families watching their homes, and communities on fire, the personal tragedies, the destruction and the massive public response are encompassed in technically powerful images. Very moving.

Judges' Comments:	This series of photographs possesses a strong narrative quality; it comprehensively depicts the issue of land degradation, while also featuring human subjects that foster a sense of immersion. Deeply resonating photos that translate crises into intimate stories. An extraordinary reminder that while a camera is a machine, the heart behind it is what makes the image move.	The composition invites the viewer in, but the story is what makes me stay. The quiet grace of a lens that looks at the world's suffering without ever looking down on it.

Judges' Comments:	Fascinating and revealing about the inner workings of one of the hardest stories in the world to report. Using cutting-edge technology and impressively vast hours of video evidence, the team reached clear conclusions in surprising detail, analyzing obscure and opaque source materials. Their work shed valuable light understanding an unpredictable, belligerent nuclear power.	Early definitive piece on China's decision, as opposed to other stories saying China was considering, banning purchases of key Nvidia microprocessors. This showed enterprise and sourcing on one of the most sensitive issues between the U.S. and China, and described the inter-reliance and tensions between the countries regarding this highly strategic component.

Judges' Comments:	Highly impressive investigative reporting. A clear, high-impact scoop that exposed alleged yearslong financial manipulation at a well-known Indonesian start-up that was backed by heavyweight investors including Temasek well before the full extent of the scandal became apparent. Details about how it inflated its numbers for years, and the overall mechanics of the fraud were meticulously laid out. This was a strong scoop that set off a big conversation about the start-up sector.	There was clearly lots of legwork involved and some strong human elements to bring it to life. A strong piece that brings attention to a largely overlooked transboundary crisis, showing how unregulated mining in Myanmar is contaminating rivers that sustain communities downstream. It stands out for connecting local voices, scientific data and regional geopolitics.

Judges' Comments:	An important piece of investigative reporting that exposes serious systemic flaws in the city's construction industry, affecting both the public and private sectors. HK01's investigation prompted the health authority to act, report the matter to police, and ultimately led to arrests over fraudulent certifications used in the city's critical infrastructure. Title of Entry:	Contest in the Pacific	Chinese organized crime goes global
Award Recipients:	Pete McKenzie, Hollie Adams, Allison Martell, David Lague, Clare Farley and Minami Funakoshi	Rebecca Tan, Katrina Northrop and Pei-Lin Wi
Judges' Comments:	A series that truly shows Reuters' strengths as a news outlet. The report on Beijing's efforts to tap its civilian fleet in the case of an invasion of Taiwan was a great example of using satellite data to uncover an otherwise hidden story. The added dispatches from the Marshall Islands and Palau offered a deeply reported, and very human, look at how these tiny nations are impacted in a variety of negative ways by ongoing tensions between global powers. The story on Palau specifically also helped connect the dots between the actions of Chinese organized crime and the goals of Beijing that we've seen play out elsewhere, like in Southeast Asia.	The Post presents several case studies of Chinese gang activity in Southeast Asia and Taiwan and evidence of the interaction between Chinese organized crime and the Chinese state. The article on the meth production operations in Southeast Asia was the most powerful and persuasive of the three articles but all showed excellent investigative reporting and writing that was full of details and well-presented.

Judges' Comments:	Spanning five years, the reporter's investigation delved deeply into a high-profile poisoning murder case, offering a full and detailed account to readers and demonstrating the value of investigative reporting.	With solid data and clear illustrations, the reports exposed the manpower problem of Taiwan's healthcare system, making direct impacts on policy. Each of the stories, including a "chained woman" and a deported migrant from the U.S., is well-written and a great read on its own. Put together, they told the story of "one nation, many faces."
